Administration Pledges To Continue Bolstering Of "Rewards And Benefits"

The Republican Administration, through its political convention in San Francisco this week, pledged a continuation of the "substantial start" that has been made "toward bolstering the rewards and benefits that accompany a military career."

The promise came in connection with the party's platform promise to "maintain and improve the effective strength and state of readiness of all these Armed Forces."

The platform supported the Air Force's Strategic Air Command, and Tactical Air Command, wanted effective guided and ballistic missiles, backed a "modern Navy with a powerful naval aircraft arm," supported an Army "whose mobility and unit fire power are without equal" and said they should all have bases at home and around the world.

To achieve this, the platform writers said, we need to attract and hold good men. In touching on the achievements already toward better incentives for career personnel, the platform, as is

U. S., French and Canadian Units of Fourth ATAF Operate From 30 Bases In NATO Defense From Eifel to the Alps

BY MAJ. GEN. ROBERT M. LEE, USAF
Commander, Fourth Allied
Tactical Air Force

THE Fourth Allied Tactical Air Force which recently observed its fourth anniversary now looks back to the successful establishment and operation of a new concept in international theater air power. It looks forward with confidence to even greater accomplishments and effectiveness in the next few years.

Fourth ATAF is NATO's largest international theater air force. It has a primary role of serving as a powerful deterrent to aggression. Its operation in this mission is graphic evidence of how nations can work together efficiently in unity when their mutual objective is effective air power for peace.

Composed of the United States Twelfth Air Force, the Premier Commandement Arien Tactique (1er CATAC) of the French Air Force, and the First Air Division of the Royal Canadian Air Force, it encompasses more than 30 expanding bases throughout South Central Germany and Eastern France.

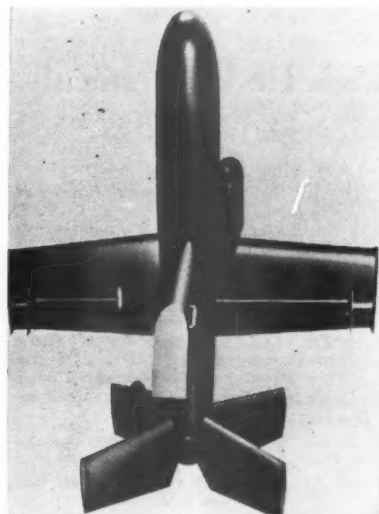

TWELFTH AIR FORCE is rapidly converting from the Korea-tested F-86F to the supersonic F-100 as its basic day fighter and fighter bomber. The F-86D is its all-weather fighter. For reconnaissance Twelfth Air Force has the RF-84F and the RB-57, and for light bombers the Martin B-57B. Additional units include three tactical missile squadrons with TM-61 Matadors. First Canadian Air Division is equipped with Sabre Mark VIs with the Orenda engine, the Canadian version of the F-86. Premier CATAC is converting from the French Ouragan and F-84G to the Mystère IV and F-84F.

The U.S. Twelfth Air Force, now commanded by Maj. Gen. John K. Gerhart, USAF, is the largest single United States air organization committed as a unit to NATO, and a good example of how U.S. military contributions are integrated into our European allied defenses.

In event of hostilities, the Twelfth's operational activities would receive NATO command direction through the Commander, Allied Air Forces, Central Europe, and the medium of Fourth ATAF. In order to prepare to meet this eventuality, the Twelfth has embarked upon a large-scale program of coordinated operations with its Allied partners. In addition to joint Allied exercises, the Twelfth, sharing its facilities wherever practicable, is deeply involved in this particular phase of Allied amity.

Major Units of Streamlined 101st Abn. Div. Formed; To Integrate at Ft. Campbell in Sept.

Formation of the major units of the 101st Airborne Division Headquarters at Ft. Campbell, Ky., is almost complete.

Commanders of all but one of the 11 divisional units have taken over their new commands, and all units are receiving personnel and equipment, conducting training and other duties, and preparing for their formal integration into the division on 21 Sept.

Not all the units are up to strength. Airborne recruits are still needed, as are trained personnel for key specialties.

Maj. Gen. Thomas L. Sherburne, USA, division commander, announced the formation of the 10 major units created under new Army organizational concepts for a streamlined airborne division, plus one unit attached for the specific purpose of operating training schools.

Maj. Gen. Sherburne

FIVE OF THE UNITS are airborne infantry combat groups, light in weight, but heavy in firepower. They are:

The 187th Airborne Infantry Combat Group, commanded by Col. Melvin Zais, the first active group of the division and the first to test the radical new organization of the airborne combat group. It is near full strength.

The 327th Airborne Infantry Combat Group, formed at reduced strength from personnel of the 187th ARCT. Lt. Col. Johnson G. Lemmon has been the acting commander of this combat group pending the arrival of Col. William A. Kuhn, who has been assigned temporarily to Test Director Headquarters, the agency which will test the 101st later this year. Colonel Kuhn has assumed command with Colonel Lemmon remaining as his deputy.

The 502d Airborne Infantry Combat Group under Col. George I. Forsythe, formed at reduced strength from both the 187th and 508th ARCTs.

The 506th Airborne Infantry Combat Group, commanded by Col. Russell M. Miner, also will be near full strength. Its personnel were drawn almost entirely from the 508th.

The 501st Airborne Infantry Combat Group under Col. Harry W. O. Kinnard, Jr., formed at reduced strength from elements of the 508th, is receiving personnel returning from leave.

Although the 101st breaks completely with the conventional tri-regimental type of organization, each of the combat groups carried a number once held by an airborne regiment. The 501st, 502d, 506th and 327th were organic units of the original 101st Airborne Division of World War II. The fifth perpetuates the 187th Airborne Infantry Regiment of the 11th Airborne Division which was later reorganized for participation in the Korean War as the 187th Airborne Regimental Combat Team.

C/S TO PRESENT COLORS

General Maxwell D. Taylor, Chief of Staff of the Army will present the colors to the Army's newest division on 21 Sept.

General Taylor has accepted an invitation from Major General Sherburne to take a leading part in the division's Organization Day review at Ft. Campbell.

For General Taylor, General Sherburne and 58 paratroopers marching in the review, the date will also mark the re-birth of their old outfit of World War II. General Taylor was commanding general, and General Sherburne artillery commander, of the WWII 101st Airborne Division.

Division artillery commander is Col. Douglass P. Quandt. Principal source units for DivArty personnel are the 674th Field Artillery Battalion of the 187th and the 320th Field Artillery Battalion of the 508th.

A NEW UNIT for an airborne division is the Command and Control Battalion. It provides the elements necessary for the commanding general's exercise of control and command of the division including administration; reconnaissance; Army aviation; liaison; law, order and discipline, and also operates the division replacement detachment. Commander of the Command and Control Battalion is Lt. Col. Conrad L. Stansberry.

Another new element under the new airborne division organizational concept is the Support Group which provides the logistic support of the division, including supply, maintenance, transportation, medical services and the important function of parachute supply and maintenance. It also administers the division band. Commander of the Support Group is Col. Alan M. Strock.

THE DIVISION'S ENGINEER unit is the 326th Airborne Engineer Battalion commanded by Lt. Col. Walter W. Hogle. It is being formed from the 22d Airborne Engineer Company of the 187th ARCT and the 598th Airborne Engineer Company of the 508th.

Because of the extent of the communications system set up for the 101st, a signal battalion, rather than the conventional signal company, has been added to the division rolls. It is the 501st Airborne Signal Battalion. Maj. Leroy McSherry, assistant division signal officer, directed the formation of the battalion until the arrival recently of Division Signal Officer Lt. Col. Ted Peterson.

The eleventh unit is the 508th Schools Command under Col. James J. Hatch. Mission of the schools command is to operate training programs for airborne volunteers, advanced basic trainees and specialists required by the division.

The eleven units will march together as a division for the first time on Organization Day, 21 Sept. They will receive their colors and be formally integrated into the 101st Airborne Division at an afternoon review.

Navy Orders Fleet-Wide Test Of New Blue-Trimmed Enlisted Man's Jumper

Navy enlisted men soon may be wearing a dress white jumper with a blue cotton collar and cuffs and white striping.

Within the next two weeks, the Brooklyn Clothing Supply Office will ship out a quantity of the new style jumpers to 23 major and secondary commands. The uniforms will be distributed to sailors who will conduct a five to six week wear test.

Since "a considerable body of Fleet opinion is represented in the recommendation to return to the pre-war dress jumper," it can be expected that the wear test will prove the suitability of the test uniform and that ultimately it will be adopted for use throughout the Navy.

The Navy made use of a similar enlisted jumper before WWII. At that time, the collar and cuffs were manufactured of wool.

It was discontinued as a standard uniform because of problems of manufacture, comfort, laundering, shrinkage, lint and fading.

The test uniform, however, is expected to overcome these difficulties since the collar and cuffs will be made of washable dark-blue colorfast cotton twill.

The new blue-trimmed outfit is said to be completely launderable without fading or running. The cuffs are an open coat-type similar to those on the solid white jumper. The sleeves taper slightly to the cuffs.

Lt. Gen. Brice Ends 35-Year Career; Brig. Gen. Shapley Dons Second Star

Lt. Gen. William O. Brice, USMC, commanding general, Fleet Marine Force Pacific, will retire in four-star rank on 1 Sept., ending a career of nearly 35 years.

He will be succeeded by Lt. Gen. Edward A. Pollock, USMC, former commander of the Marine Corps Schools, Quantico, Va.

Before taking his present command in Hawaii, General Brice was assistant

CMC for Air.

Brig. Gen. Allan Shapley, USMC, the son of Capt. Lloyd S. Shapley, USN (Ret.) will be advanced to two-star rank on the same day that General Brice retires.

Also retiring on 1 Sept. is Brig. Gen. Melvin L. Krulwich, USMCR, who served with the corps in both WWI and WWII. He is now a New York attorney.

220 Schools Will Start Flight Training

Flight training for Army and Air Force ROTC students will begin this coming school year, and ultimately will be offered at 180 Air Force and 40 Army institutions.

The flying safety features of the flight training programs will be controlled by the Civil Aeronautics Administration. The program will be conducted by CAA-approved civilian flight training schools at no expense to the student.

Certification of instructors, flight checks and final qualifications also will be administered by the CAA. Those who successfully complete the course will be qualified to apply for private pilot's licenses.

Approximately 38 schools where the Air Force flight training program initially will be offered have been tentatively selected on the basis of surveys to determine the schools' proximity to CAA certified civilian light aircraft training facilities, sufficient student output and interest, and capability of the school to include this new phase of AFOTC activity in their current curricula.

The Army will select institutions on a "best qualified" basis including consideration of proximity to CAA certified training facilities and selection of institutions located in all sections of the country. The Army also will consider the possibility of contracting for this training at many joint Army and Air Force ROTC institutions.

The Air Force, which will initiate the

Maj. Kenneth R. Williams, USAF, and Capt. Harry S. Reinert, USAF, Assistant Professors of Air Science at Detachment 550, Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, Troy, N. Y., have been selected as the check pilots to check out the various detachment pilots in the Navion.

The flight program, an added feature to the regular AFOTC course, will consist of 35 hours of light plane training and will be under the overall supervision of Maj. Gen. Matthew K. Deichmann, USAF, Commandant of the AFOTC, Air University, Maxwell AFB, Ala.

SAC Pilots Fly B-47s In GE Trophy Event

General Edwin W. Rawlings, USAF, Senior Department of Defense Coordinating Officer for the National Aircraft Show, has announced that three B-47 Stratofortresses from Strategic Air Command will compete in the annual General Electric Trophy Event.

Scheduled as a part of Sunday, 2 Sept. activities at the Oklahoma City Show, the aircraft will fly a new route for the first time this year. They will depart from Kindley AFB, Bermuda, flying east to west to finish at Will Rogers Field.

The 1955 event was won by a Stratofortress from the 320th Bombardment Wing, March AFB, Calif., piloted by Maj. Leonard J. Stevens, USAF. Co-pilot was Maj. Freeman J. Weedman; Aircraft Observer, Capt. Glenn L. Fornes and Crew Chief, Sgt. James P. Flohe. They completed the course from March to Philadelphia International Airport in 3 hours, 57 minutes, 59.2 seconds at an average speed of 589.294 mph.

This stands as the current General Electric Trophy record as the 1955 event marked the initial departure from closed-course flying for the GE Trophy.

The big aircraft is powered by General Electric J-47 turbo-jet engines.

George E. Fouch, General Manager, Evendale Operating Department, Aircraft Gas Turbine Division, General Electric Company, presented the Trophy to the winning crew in 1955. He is also expected to make the presentation to this year's winner.

LT. COL. HARRY L. BUSH, USA and Maj. William C. Dysinger, USA make it a mutual congratulations upon landing after their record-breaking flight in an Army H-21C helicopter. They set a new world helicopter record for distance in a closed circuit without payload, on 11 Aug., by flying 1,199.07 miles non-stop in 11 hours and 58 minutes. The flight was conducted by the Army with the cooperation of the Vertol Aircraft Corp., and under the supervision of Mr. Charles S. Logsdon of the National Aeronautic Association.

Select 12 Out of 450 For Senior Officer Flight Training; Assign First Graduates

Twelve senior Army officers have been named by the Department of the Army to attend a special 35-week course of Army aviation flight training beginning next month.

This is the second such group to be selected for this particular type of course to provide aviation qualified senior officers for the Army. The training is given at The Army Aviation School, Ft. Rucker, Alabama.

Included in the newly announced group are Colonels John J. Tolson, John L. Liedelheimer, Christian Hanburger, Daniel H. Heyne, John Norton, Jack K. Norris, Robert H. Schulz, James L. Kaiser, and Lieutenant Colonels Russell W. Humphreys, William Hupalo, Raymond G. Jones, and Charles E. Rousek.

Selected from about 450 applicants, the twelve officers will complete their course in May 1957. Department of the Army officials said that many highly outstanding officers could not be accepted for the course due to the limited number of available spaces. The first group of 12 senior officers began their course in fixed and rotary wing flight training last year and were graduated last month.

Members of the group and their present assignments are, Col. John D. Edmunds, Assistant Commandant, The Army Aviation School, Ft. Rucker, Ala.; Col. John Inskeep, Commanding Officer, Wolters AB, Tex.; Col. William R. Tuck, Staff and Faculty, The Army Aviation School, where he will act as project officer for the National Air Show at Oklahoma City in September; Col. Hallett D. 82d Abn. Div. Works Out Way To Take Aerial Photographs From Army L-20s

Aerial photography in the 82d Airborne Division, Ft. Bragg, N. C., has been given a boost by the ideas of the Division Photo Interpreter, the skill of the 782d Ordnance Battalion and a ready-made hole in an airplane.

In the past, the Division Photo Interpreter, 1st Lt. Fred E. Phillips, jr., had to depend on the Air Force for his photography. Limitations in planning a training schedule far in the future often prevented meeting the Air Force requirement of six weeks' advance notice on aerial pictures.

Lt. Phillips decided that the thing to do was install a camera in one of the Army's own light planes organic to the Division. The Cessna L-19 was out, because Department of the Army approval would be required to cut a hole in its floor for the camera.

In the De Havilland L-20 "Beaver," though, a ready-made emergency door was easily converted into a down-looking picture window, about four feet behind the pilot.

Then, 2d Lt. David C. Sturm and his Service Platoon of Co. "B," 782d Ord. Bn. built a mount for the K-24 and K-25 cameras, stable enough to halt vibration and light enough so one man could mount the camera.

No pictures have been taken yet, but when the need arises, the 82d Airborne Division now has the capabilities to produce its own aerial photographs.

Sprints from deck to stratosphere

His beat is the oceans of the world. His job, to challenge unknown intruders on our defense perimeters. A Navy pilot is a seagoing sentry on 24-hour duty.

A major role in this job of positive interception—and as far from our shores as possible—is being assigned to the Douglas F4D Skyray. Less than a minute after leaving the deck, Skyray can soar past the 10,000-ft. mark. Seconds later it's hissing through the stratosphere . . . 35,000 feet up . . . at the ready with rockets and cannons.

This rate of climb comes as no surprise. Skyray also holds the world's official F.A.I. sea level speed records for the 3- and 100-kilometre courses.

Douglas F4D Skyray—fastest carrier-based interceptor. Performance of agile Skyray continues the Douglas tradition of "faster and farther with a bigger payload." Yet performance figures are meaningless without a skilled pilot at the controls. If you are interested in a career as a Naval Aviator, write Nav. Cad. Washington 25, D. C.

USN Launches "Most Modern" Carrier, USS Ranger; Has All-Aluminum Elevator

The world's most modern aircraft carrier, the Forrestal-class USS Ranger, will be launched on 29 Sept. at the Newport News Shipbuilding and Drydock Co.

She will be the same length, 1,046 feet, as her sister ship the USS Saratoga which is seven feet longer than the USS Forrestal. Both the Forrestal and the Saratoga are already in service with the fleet.

In addition to having all the improvements of the Saratoga, the Ranger has been designed with "major advances in her weapons-handling equipment," the Navy said.

One new feature of the Ranger is an all-welded aluminum elevator which has been installed on her port side. All steel elevators were built into the Forrestal and the Saratoga. The Ranger's elevator, 63 by 52 feet, weighs 105 tons and is the largest and heaviest all-welded aluminum structure ever built. By using aluminum, the Navy saved nine and one-half tons.

The Ranger's keel was laid on 2 Aug.

Commands Patuxent MAD

Lt. Col. Judson C. Richardson, USMC, has succeeded Lt. Col. J. K. Dill, USMC, as Commanding Officer, Marine Aviation Detachment, NAS Patuxent River, Md.

Colonel Richardson reported to his new post from the Senior School, Quantico, Va. Colonel Dill takes a research and development billet in the Office of the Director of Aviation, HQMC.

VADM ROBERT GOLDTHWAITE, USN, new Deputy Commander in Chief of the U. S. Atlantic Fleet, meets the Assistant Chiefs of Staff at Fleet Headquarters, Norfolk, Va. Left to right, are: Capt. G. L. Huff, USN, (Plans); Capt. W. V. Pratt, II, USN, (Administration); Capt. L. G. Shaffer, USN, (Communications); Capt. F. B. Schultz, USN, (Logistics); Admiral Goldthwaite; and Capt. F. N. Phillips, Jr., USN, (Intelligence). Blocked from view is Capt. R. N. Sharp, USN, (Operations). Admiral Goldthwaite arrived from Pensacola, Fla., where he served as Chief of Naval Air Basic Training. He fills the billet vacated by VADM. C. R. Brown, USN, now Commander of the U. S. Sixth Fleet in the Mediterranean.

1955 and her launching 26 months later will establish a new launching-time record for Forrestal-class carriers.

Her building time was speeded up by use of two drydocks. Construction was started in a small dock; four months later, when the Forrestal was launched, the partially completed hull of the Ranger was floated into the larger dock vacated by the Forrestal.

The Ranger has been named after the first ship ever completely designed and built as an aircraft carrier. The original Ranger, also built at Newport News, was completed in 1928. She was about half the size of the Ranger. After a distinguished record—she was the first American carrier to cross the Arctic Circle, the first to raid German shipping in Norway, and the first to have a jet plane land on her deck—she was sold for scrap in 1946.

In addition to the Forrestal, Saratoga and Ranger, the Navy has been authorized by Congress to build three other sister ships.

USN Adds Link to CONAD; LCdr. Athow Commands

A new link was added to the Continental Air Defense radar network on 17 Aug. when the radar picket ship USS Finch was commissioned at the Mare Island Naval Shipyard, Vallejo, Calif.

The converted Finch, a former destroyer escort ship built in Orange, Texas, in 1943, will be commanded by LCdr. James K. Athow, USN.

Two sister ships to the Finch, the Falgout and Koiner, which were built by the Mare Island Shipyard are already in service with CONAD. Similar conversions are in progress on the destroyer escorts Vance and Durant.

A former enlisted man, Commander Athow served in the South Pacific during WWII. He reports to the Finch from duty as Executive Officer of the destroyer Hollister.

Navy Wages "Cold War" At NTC, Great Lakes

The Navy and the Public Health Service have released details of the "cold war" fought at the U. S. Naval Training Center, Great Lakes, Ill.

In the period from January to April, 1956, approximately 4,000 recruits at the Center were given a new virus vaccine developed to combat certain respiratory diseases prevalent in military recruits.

The field trial of the serum showed that the vaccine prevented from 50 to 70 per cent of the total reported respiratory illnesses characterized by fever. These illnesses are of the gripple variety and do not include the non-feverish infections, generally known as the common cold.

The vaccinated recruits were observed along with 12,000 unvaccinated recruits who served as controls.

FMFLant Hqs. Shifts Four Staff Officers

Col. Lewis H. Delano, USMC, has succeeded Col. William A. Stiles, USMC, as Planning Officer for Aircraft, Fleet Marine Force, Atlantic.

He reported from the Naval War College, Newport, R. I. Colonel Stiles is en route to the Far East for duty with the First Marine Aircraft Wing.

At the same time, FMFLant Headquarters, Norfolk, Va., effected the shift of three lieutenant colonels.

Lt. Col. Fred A. Steele, USMC, assumed duties on the staff of the Assistant Chief of Staff for Intelligence. Reporting from the Air Staff and Command College, Maxwell AFB, Montgomery, Ala., he took over from Lt. Col. Albert A. Arsenault, USMC, who goes to Marine Corps Schools, Quantico, Va.

Lt. Col. Joseph L. Atkins, USMC, has been assigned to the staff of the Assistant Chief of Staff for Logistics, in Aircraft, FMF. He reported from the Third Marine Division in the Far East.

Lt. Col. Patrick Harrison, USMC, replaced Maj. Alfred J. McCaled, USMC, as Aircraft Assignment Engineering Officer, Aircraft, FMF. He was assigned to Air Force, FMF. Major McCaled goes to a post in Atlantic City, N. J.

Heads Senior School At MCS

Col. William W. Buchanan, USMC, has assumed duties as Director, Senior School, Marine Corps Schools, Quantico, Va.

He succeeded Col. Herman Nickerson who is now on duty at Pearl Harbor as a staff officer for Fleet Marine Force, Pacific.

Col. Swanson Leads Olympic Shoot Team

Col. Emmet O. Swanson, USMCR, a former Army dentist, has been selected by the Olympic Committee to lead the American squad of rifle shooters this Fall at the Olympic Games in Melbourne, Australia.

Colonel Swanson holds the record for being the longest continually competing Olympic athlete in the country. He has participated in each of the Games since his first selection in 1928 when he was a 1st Lieutenant in the U. S. Army Dental Corps Reserve. This year, however, the Colonel, who was transferred to the Marine Corps in 1937, will be a non-firing Team Captain.

During WWII, he served as a Line officer in the Marines and won the Bronze Star for heroism on Iwo Jima.

The Colonel is now at Camp Perry, Ohio, where he is leading the Marine Corps Reserve Team, participating in the National Trophy Rifle Matches.

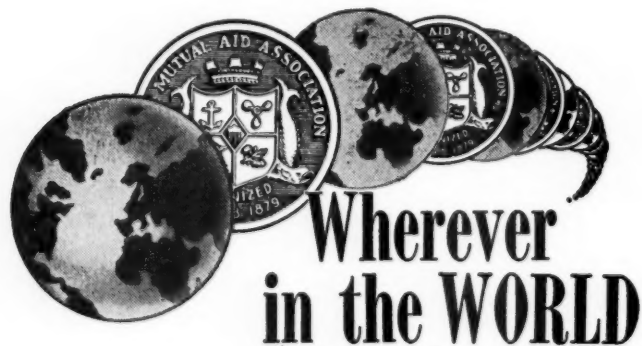

The National Trophy Rifle Matches got underway on 19 Aug. and will continue through 8 Sept.

Lejeune "Globe" Wins '56 Journalism Prize

"The Globe," weekly newspaper of MCB Camp Lejeune, N. C., has won the Annual Marine Corps Journalism Award for the second consecutive year.

The paper is edited by T/Sgt. William Daum, USMC. Maj. Douglas Kane, USMC, Base Informational Services Officer, has additional duties as Officer-in-Charge.

The gold trophy, symbolic of the award, will remain with "The Globe" until August 1957. The Camp Pendleton "Scout" won the prize in 1953 and 1954.

U. S. Air Force

Look To 1960's For Brighter Picture

Young Air Force officers on obligated two to four year tours have unlimited opportunities for advancement if they are career minded and can look ahead a few years to the 1960s, the Pentagon reports.

This fact is pointed out by Hq USAF personnel officials in a reexamination of the so-called 'hump' in officer structure—an outgrowth of the rapid WW II expansion and the continued post-war requirement for a large Air Force.

The Air Force said:

In the 'hump' are officers of the same age bracket who have approximately the same amount of commissioned service. Due to retirement factors and other attrition, personnel officials see a substantial reduction in the 'hump' starting in 1961 and continuing for the years following. This means that the young officers who are behind the 'hump' will have the opportunity to move rapidly to positions of greater responsibility in the 1960s.

This fact, and the continuous improvement of career service for the Air Force member, and his family as well, is being brought to the attention of thousands of Air Force officers who are undecided about AF life as a career. About one-third of the AF's approximately 135,000 officers are now serving on a reserve obligated tour and have a definite date of separation. About one-half of the obligated tour officers are ROTC college graduates; nearly all of them are lieutenants (27 years of age or younger) and about one-half are rated officers.

Overall, less than one fourth of the 34,000 obligated tour officers, whose dates of separation fall during the current fiscal year, have applied for continued active duty.

Personnel officials feel many in the obligated tour group do not fully appreciate the career advantages which can be anticipated in the next few years, once the 'hump' has begun to dissipate.

Grandview to Have TV Weather Transmission

Television for the transmission of weather information will be employed by the Grandview AFB, Mo., this September for the first time.

The Weather-Vision system will consist of a mounted TV camera above a lighted map table, transmission equipment and several receivers. When a pilot or other person wishes weather information, he tunes in the receiver and is shown maps and charts of weather in their area of interest. A voice-actuated tape recorder will be tied in with the system so that a running record can be kept of all voice transmissions.

Sponsored by the Air Defense Command and operated by the 19th Weather Squadron (MATS), commanded by Lt. Col. Everett J. Cartwright, USAF, the system will provide 24-hour weather information through this two-way audio-visual hookup.

The Weather-Vision system was installed under the supervision of Mr. Walter E. Smith, by the Dage Television Division, Thompson Products Corporation, Michigan City, Ind.

New Missile Data Lab Ready at Patrick AFB

A new technical laboratory for housing missile data reduction facilities has been completed at the Air Force Missile Test Center, Patrick AFB, Fla., to replace WW II temporary quarters.

The "E" shaped building has 198 rooms and 123,500 square feet of floor space. Walls are of cement block panel construction and will withstand winds of 120 miles per hour. Furthermore, the building is impervious to salt corrosion, often a major problem in that area.

The building was designed to meet present and future needs of the data reduction component of the Missile Test Center. Former facilities hampered efficiency because of the problem of maintaining temperature and humidity conditions necessary for precise functioning of delicate electronic equipment.

AF Academy Accepts First Big Building Job

Construction of a sanitary sewer system for the Air Force Academy has been accepted as completed by Col. A. E. Stoltz, USAF, Director of the Air Force Academy Construction Agency.

The work, which was done under a $270,000 contract by the Brown and Olds Plumbing and Heating Corp., of El Paso, Tex., consisted of approximately 50,000 feet of vitrified clay pipe sanitary sewer lines. Rock excavation totaled an estimated 3000 cubic feet, and the pipe was laid at depths from four to 16 feet.

The firm, which completed the work three weeks ahead of schedule, praised the Air Force Academy Construction Agency for its co-operation. The job was the first large-scale construction to be completed for the Academy.

TAC Tells Changes

Personnel changes in two key staff positions are announced by Tactical Air Command Headquarters at Langley AFB, Va.

Col. Hal E. Ercanbrack, jr., USAF, Chief of the Troop Carrier Division of TAC operations, has been reassigned to Headquarters USAF, and Colonel Francis E. Timlin, USAF, has been named to the position of Assistant Deputy for Operations.

Colonel Ercanbrack commanded the 61st Troop Carrier Group in the Far East during the early part of the Korean conflict, returning with it to the U. S. in December 1952. He came to TAC in August 1953.

Colonel Timlin had been director of doctrine for TAC since April 1953.

Racing F-100s May Get Fuel In Air, Top Sound

Rules by which the six Tactical Air Command pilots who will fly North American F-100C Super Sabres in the Bendix Trophy Event will be governed, have been announced by Col. M. C. Horgan, USAF, Chief of the Operational Control Team for the National Aircraft Show to be held at Oklahoma City Labor Day week-end.

The winner of the event will be judged on an elapsed time from "wheels rolling" at George AFB, Calif., to a "pass by" of the Bendix pylon at Will Rogers Field. The pilots will depart from George AFB at ten-minute intervals, and make their finishing pass at the Oklahoma City airport approximately 300 feet above the ground.

For the first time in the history of the event, aerial refueling has been authorized. Information available from Capt. Wallace B. McCafferty, Air Force project officer for the event, and himself a contestant in 1955, indicates that crews have not yet decided on whether they will utilize this method. As the 1956 course will be 1120 statute miles, or 977 nautical miles, the fighter will be able to complete the event without refueling through the use of exterior tanks. Therefore, the pilots may well decide to use such a method rather than use aerial refueling or a ground stop.

Another first for the 1956 event will be permission for pilots to exceed the speed of sound during their let-down as they approach the home pylon.

Upholds Services' Honor. All of the Services should be grateful to the Secretary of the Army, Wilber M. Bracken, for his action in awarding a Certificate of Citation to Cdr. John F. Bracken, USNR, (see photo on page 3 of this issue) and thus calling nation-wide attention to his activities and accomplishments.

Commander Bracken, an attorney in civilian life, devoted considerable time and energy in bringing before the American Bar Association's House of Delegates the thoughtless and dangerous practice of a number of judges (usually, but not always, of police court level) who on occasions offer military service as an alternative to prosecution and/or imprisonment for criminal offenses. As a result of his vigorous activities the House of Delegates adopted a resolution condemning such practice as "reprehensible and contrary to the best interests of the United States and its Armed Forces."

Of course, any of the Services would promptly reject the enlistment of any man who came to them under such an injunction. However, it is not always that they knew of the background. Moreover, great harm already had been done by publicizing such a judgment, whereas any subsequent rejection of an enlistment would get no publicity at all.

There was a period before the War when such practices became prevalent but national publicity eventually cut the number of cases down. Now they seem to have been growing again, but we hope that Commander Bracken's activities will bring them to a halt. At any rate he deserves the appreciation of all in the Armed Services for his work in their behalf.

Justice For Nurses. The Defense Department should not wait for completion of work on its 1956 Legislative Package to make known its intention to fight for improved career opportunities for all Army, Navy and Air Force nurses and medical specialists. President Eisenhower is in favor of such action, and so is Defense Secretary Wilson.

The Secretaries of the Services and their Surgeons General have urged that legislation be passed to eliminate discrimination against hundreds of nurses and medical specialists, whose promotions lag far behind other officers, both male and female.

In view of the acute shortage of nurses and the fact that large numbers are completing tours of duty and will be eligible for separation, we believe that the Defense Department should state without delay its determination to submit to the 85th Congress a bill, similar to that which was introduced late in the 84th Congress, to end the situation in which nurses find it extremely difficult to advance beyond the rank of captain in the Army and Air Force and lieutenant in the Navy in comparison with all other officers.

A Great Airman. The death in an automobile accident last week of Col. David C. Schilling, USAF, is a great loss to the Service. The fact is that today's fighter airplane and its prominent position in our defense structure owes a great deal to the faith and ability of "Cliff" Schilling. Colonel Schilling was not only one of the world's greatest fighter pilots in war (he shot down 23 enemy planes in aerial combat plus 10 others on the ground), but also in peace. His faith in that type of warplane was virtually unlimited. In 1948 he planned and executed a deployment of 16 F-80s of the 56th Fighter Group from Selfridge Field, Mich., to Germany. Later while on duty in Washington he planned and completed the first nonstop jet fighter flight from England to the United States. This won for him the Har-

A Single Service

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

The recent surface eruptions of underlying deep problems and frictions between the Services must be most gratifying to the Communist as valid proof that we have yet not settled on the exact nature of the threat they present, nor on the means of overcoming this threat.

I suggest that an acceptance by the decision makers of what follows might clarify this situation for the benefit of the citizens of this country and motivate the required corrections.

Basically, and in line with our non-initiating policy, the military threat facing the United States can be defined by saying that the United States must:

1. Have the military capability vis-a-vis the enemy to, at any time, exact such a high price for an all out attack against us as to make it so prohibitively expensive that he will not dare launch it. (Defense—Air Defense in particular—of the North American Continent is what I am talking about.)

2. Have the military capability to strike the bases and the homeland of the enemy who dared launch such an attack as previously mentioned with such speed and in such magnitude that he would suffer irreparable damage. (Retaliation — Bombardment by any and all weapons systems that can be brought to bear.)

3. Have the military capability to carry on military operations of magnitudes short of total global war. (Deterrent—the ability to prevent, by military means, losses to Communist aggression by default or by the inability to fight any but the "big" war. The capability to engage in "brush fire" wars, peripheral war, conventional wars.)

items number one and two as each is one face of the same coin. Therefore, the threat reduces to two segments. One segment involved with total war and total defense—and one segment involved with lesser wars.

From this point the question arises whether or not the United States has organized its military structure, built weapons systems, and assigned roles and missions with the proper threat, and its segmentation into two parts, uppermost in mind. I would say that the answer must be in the negative. Granted that we have built up SAC and ADC and that they have been effective to date—this has been so only because the enemy is just now acquiring his own capability—we have gone about meeting the threat without a true and definitive appreciation of what it was and with an outmoded military organization. As far as the third required capability is concerned, a capability which is probably the only "real" answer in this atomic age, little or nothing has been done to acquire it or to devise an organization in which it and the new weapons systems available for use in it can operate.

Under existing conditions each Service competes against the others for not only money but for prestige and political favor. More important of all the competition is for brainpower—scientists and technicians. This Inter-Service competition, keen as it is, loses out to industry as the Services are the impecunious bidders and suffer the fate of such.

Under the conditions set forth and in the context of today's crucial international situation there is little wonder that we have Inter-Service bickerings as each Service strives to carry out the responsibilities assigned it and to maintain its place in the sun. This may be fact, a fact of life so to speak, but that does not make the situation any more palatable or any more endurable. Corrections and reorientations are needed immediately.

The answers are not easy to come by but perhaps the following will elicit and motivate thinking on the subject:

1. The establishment of a Single National Military Service, with a true general staff, serving one commander.
2. The revision of the roles and missions assigned the several elements (perhaps they will not be called Army, Navy, etc.) of the single service in the light of the existing two-segmented threat and in a context that will make these roles and missions more adequately reflect the oncoming weapons system and be capable of profiting from the greatly increased potential of these new systems.
3. Centralization, coordination, and close correlation in the utilization of brainpower between the military single service and industry.
4. The provision of the funds required to achieve the scientific break-through desired.

COLONEL, INFANTRY USA

Attention Mr. Cordiner

Editor, THE JOURNAL:

I noted with interest in the 30 June JOURNAL that chairman Cordiner told our pay study unit that compensation ranks fourth in a study of his G.E. employee's attitudes. It is my hope that he will further point out to our pay study group his G.E. advertisement in the July Fortune which states G.E. workers in 1955 earned an average of $5,627 annually. Perhaps they can afford to rank compensation fourth with average earnings in that bracket. What is the average earning of the serviceman compared to this plush figure of $5,627.

CAREER SOLDIER

T-6, Flying Classroom for Nearly 250,000 Service Pilots, Is Retired With Honors

BARTOW AIR BASE, FLORIDA

THE venerable T-6 Texan advanced trainer, which taught nearly 250,000 U.S. and allied pilots how to fly, was phased out here 18 Aug. with top honors from the Air Force and industry.

More than 20,000 Floridians attended the air show and ceremony that marked the last student flight of the famed aircraft which has been taking student pilots through their training period since it first flew in 1939.

Principal speaker was Mr. Alexander Burton, Vice President of North American Aviation, which manufactured the T-6 and its current successor, the more powerful and longer-ranged T-28.

T O T H E GRADUATES of the school, Mr. Burton emphasized that while North American has "several divisions deeply involved in missiles and their engines," he expects that manned aircraft "will continue to be the mainstay of our business for many years to come—just as they will continue to be the first line of defense for our country."

Mr. Burton also took the occasion to stress to the young officers the advantages of remaining in the Air Force. "We feel," he said, "that every young man should carefully consider the advantages of remaining in the Air Force as a career, not only from the patriotic standpoint, but from the standpoint of the advantages that will accrue to him as an individual."

Maj. Gen. Gabriel P. Disosway, USAF, commander of the Flying Training Air Force, introduced Mr. Burton.

BRIG. GEN. HENRY R. SPICER, USAF, Chief of Staff of the Air Training Command, who represented Maj. Gen. Charles T. Myers, USAF, ATC commander, presented a Department of the Air

OLD AND THE NEW. The famous T-6 advanced trainer (top), which was phased out last week in ceremonies at Bartow Air Base, Fla., and has now been replaced by the faster and more modern T-28, shown below. Both trainers, well known to Air Force and Navy fliers, were made by North American Aviation. The T-6 was known as the "Texan" in this country, the "Harvard" by the British, and the SNJ by the Navy. It trained nearly a quarter of a million pilots in 34 different countries. It was also used as a spotter plane for fighter-bombers in the Korean War.

Force Award of Appreciation to Mr. Burton for North American Aviation, Inc.

2d Lt. James Kelm, USAF, one of the school's graduates was selected to make the last student flight in the T-6. When he landed he was presented with a model of the North American F-100 as a memento of the occasion. The award was made by Miss Sally Fisher, Miss Florida of 1956.

Next there was a flyby of T-28s and the Lockheed T-33 jet trainer, now being used for advanced training.

At the conclusion of the ceremonies, Lt. Col. James S. Edney, commander, Bartow Air Base, presented the outstanding academic award to 2d Lt. Seymour J. Rafferty, USAF, and the Graduation Diploma to Class Commander, 1st Lt. John J. Doyle, jr., USAF, for Class 57-1—the last one to use the T-6s.

The invocation and benediction for the ceremony were made by Chaplain (1st Lt.) Lucas W. Buttry, USAF.

MR. ROBERT ANDERSON (BOB) HOOVER, North American Aviation test pilot, gave a demonstration with the F-86 Saberjet which aroused the admiration of all the pilots on the field as well as the civilian spectators. The landing strip here is only 5,000 feet but Mr. Hoover landed in less than half its length and then just turned around and took off again.

THE THUNDERBIRD demonstration team, operating their North American F-100 Supersabers out of Pinecastle AFB, gave their world famous show which is now being opened with a sonic boom delivered by the team's solo pilot, Lt. Bill Pogue, USAF. Other members of the team are Maj. Jack Broughton, USAF, leader, Lt. Billy Ellis, USAF, Lt. Bob Anderson, USAF, and Capt. Ed Palmgren, USAF. Maj. Donald Ferris, USAF, is narrator. The team is based at Nellis AFB, Nev.

The Air Base here is one of nine contract bases which conduct flight training for the Air Force. It is operated by the Garner Aviation Corp., of which Mr. Fleetwood Garner of Richmond, Va., is president.

MAJ. GEN. W. R. WOLFINBARGER, USAF-Ret., is General Manager of the Corporation. He joined the firm just after his retirement from active duty in 1953. General Wolfinbarger has had an interesting and varied career in the Air Force. In 1940-41 he was assistant military attaché at Berlin, following which he went to Washington to serve on the General Staff and then on duty with the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Later he commanded the 13th Fighter Command in the South and Southwest Pacific. Other assignments included duty on the staff and faculty of the National War College, Assistant Chief of Staff USAF, commanding the 9th Air Force, and Director of the Joint Tactical Air Support Board.

Students being sent here now are all AFOTC graduates. A new class enters every six weeks. The student load averages 400 to 500 at a time while the annual output runs between 900 and 1,000.

The base originally was a B-17 base and later used for fighters.

As a contract base all the instruction is given by civilian employees and the base is operated entirely by the contractors. There are about 30 Air Force personnel stationed here, but their principal functions are quality control and checking the students' progress.

Col. Krisberg Heads Wright Research Lab

Col. Nathan L. Krisberg, USAF, has been named Chief of the Wright Air Development Center Aeronautical Research Laboratory at Dayton, Ohio. He replaces Col. Aldro Lingard, USAF, who held the post since July 1955.

Colonel Krisberg came to WADC from the USAF Institute of Technology. He spent the last two years studying aerodynamics at California Institute of Technology.

Colonel Lingard left WADC to attend the Air War College at Maxwell AFB, Ala. He came to WADC in 1951 as Chief of the Automatic Flight Control Branch in the Aircraft Laboratory. He became Assistant Chief of the Aeronautical Research Laboratory in August 1954.

Fourth ATAF Operates From 30 Bases In NATO Defense From Eifel To The Alps

For example, the Twelfth's complex air control system is available to our Allies for the recovery of lost aircraft on navigational flights. Its air communications facilities including invaluable navigation aids, is another feature of the interchange of facilities. A return gesture is the provisions for Twelfth Air Force aircraft to utilize airfields of the other Allied partners when necessary. In this way the United States forces are helping to create a new heritage of understanding and co-operation, so vital to the success of our NATO mission.

THIS INTERNATIONAL PROGRAM undergoes constant testing in Fourth ATAF's continuing polishing of its mobility, flexibility, combat readiness and firepower. Since its area of responsibility, Central Europe from the Eifel to the Alps, is only minutes away from potential attack on an historic battlefield, Fourth ATAF maintains a constant defensive posture while being prepared to launch immediately a counter-offensive. It stands instantly ready to resist atomic attack while capable of launching and sustaining its own attack through the critical phases of the battle for the control of the air.

Fourth ATAF has achieved this status as a peace weapon in only four years of development within an international alliance unique in history. It is truly international in its makeup, its responsibilities and activities. Its success has been possible only through the dedication and support of each of its national members, down to and including individuals of the French, Royal Canadian and United States Air Forces. And soon to be added to these partners of peace will be units of the new West German Republic Air Force.

A visitor to Fourth ATAF Headquarters is made aware of its interwoven international fiber as he steps from a plane onto a nearby French air strip, to be transported on German soil to United States buildings for a briefing by Canadian officers. The internationally harmonious situation is symbolized and summarized by flags of the United States, France and Canada, being rotated in position daily and flying together with the flags of NATO and the West German Republic, the host nation.

THIS UNITY IS MAGNIFIED during frequent field exercises by the addition of tactical units from other nations of the NATO community. For example, during a training exercise last year permanent elements of Fourth ATAF were augmented by units of the Greek, Italian and Turkish Air Forces from Southern Europe. The theoretical opponent of the Fourth ATAF in the exercise, the Second Allied Tactical Air Force, composed of British, Dutch and Belgian units located in the northern part of Central Europe, was reinforced by squadrons of the Norwegian and Danish Air Forces of Allied Forces Northern Europe. Thus, from contributions of eleven partner nations, NATO was able to assemble a flexible, interchangeable and mobile lineup of air power, reaching from the North Sea to the Mediterranean.

Naturally, a complex organization structure is necessary to frame the massive NATO defense pattern, but the part of theater air power in it is relatively simple. Under Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers, Europe (SHA-PE), NATO's top military headquarters (see chart), comes Allied Forces, Central Europe (AFCE) with divisions for air, ground and sea forces, of which Allied Air Forces Central Europe (AIRCENT) commanded by Air Chief Marshal Sir George Mills, RAF, is the air component. AIRCENT is Fourth ATAF's immediate higher headquarters. Fourth ATAF, of course, is linked directly with its units of the United States, Canadian, and French air forces, with provisions for the inclusion of West German units.

IN ACTUAL OPERATION, the organizational system works efficiently and smoothly, due largely to the fact that each section of Fourth ATAF Headquarters is composed of personnel of each of its participating nations, personnel spaces being filled in the ratio of 50 per cent U.S., 30 per cent French and 20 per cent Canadian. The exact extent of future German contributions to the Headquarters has not yet been determined.

Obviously, this closely knit international theater air force has not come about without its problems and setbacks. From a piece of paper in April, 1952, Fourth ATAF has grown from scratch through numerous perplexities, including all those of a national command, plus others of an international command.

At the beginning, Fourth ATAF lacked everything it needed—men, equipment, communications, financing and housing. For a time it existed largely through generous contributions of its national elements. It still lacks many things it needs but through recognition of the vital necessity for a strong NATO defense system, the deficiencies in its requirements are being steadily overcome.

For example, Fourth ATAF is no longer completely dependent upon its national organizations for support. International financing is progressing and during 1955 NATO was able to provide operational financing to the extent of half of headquarters requirements. Approval has been received for additional financial support from international funds during the coming year.

HOUSING IS ANOTHER PROBLEM now being partially solved. Thus far United States personnel have commuted over a narrow, winding and sometimes icy road to and from the nearest U.S. base, 18 miles away. A modern U.S. housing area which will provide housing for one half the U.S. families is under construction and will be ready for occupancy in the near future. Canadian personnel at Fourth ATAF Headquarters rely on the German and Luxembourg economies for their housing, and French families have French French government provided accommodations.

Aside from these steady advances, the immediate future is bright with prospects of further accomplishments.

Recovering from natural and expected growing pains, Fourth ATAF is ready to integrate into its ranks elements of the new West German Air Force, newer and faster aircraft, a strengthened communications system and a considerable expansion of its international pilot exchange and cross training programs.

Meantime, it maintains 24-hour readiness in all operations to insure maximum effectiveness of its deterrent power in Western Europe.

ARMY AND AF PERSONNEL chiefs are receiving praise from Defense officials for their quick work in getting out to the field details on forthcoming augmentation programs. There had been charges that the Services were not pushing this legislation strongly enough during testimony on Capitol Hill. THESE ALLEGATIONS seemingly were refuted by the overwhelming Congressional support for the augmentation legislation. Immediately upon the President's approval of the bill, the Army and Air Force moved to get the ball rolling. By this time, officers throughout the world have had a chance to read and study the regulations under which the appointments will be made. Applications for Army officers begin 1 Oct.; the Air Force opens up its application period on 15 Oct. The Journal was pleased to have published in its issues of 11 and 18 August the complete texts of the Army and Air Force draft regulations as part of the overall effort to keep the field informed.

PENTAGON INSIDERS are speculating that it was more than mere coincidence which saw announcement of assignment changes for the brigadier generals last week. The Army, after previously announcing that he "had been considering retiring for some time" and having said "it is anticipated that he will request retirement effective in September or October, 1956," named Brig. Gen. Lyal C. Metheny, USA, to head the Florida Military District. The Air Force announced that Brig. Gen. Robert L. Scott, USAF, Director of Information Services, would be given command of the 3600th Combat Crew Training Wing at Luke AFB, Ariz. Both of these generals were mentioned in news stories during the recent inter-Service difficulties which occasioned the extraordinary all-Service news conference led by SecDef Wilson.

THE AIR FORCE'S T-BIRD, the Lockheed T-33 trainer is filling a new role as a jet truck. The Air Materiel Command says that of the 200 most critical items causing maintenance problems, 90 per cent are small enough to be carried in the rear cockpit of the plane.

THE STRINGENT BAN on military fliers cracking the sonic boom in flying demonstrations is being relaxed. One reason, of course, is the advent of faster aircraft, such as the famed Air Force Thunderbirds switch to supersonic North American F-100 Super Sabres. BUT THERE'S ANOTHER REASON: wise heads at the Pentagon have decided that the public should become acquainted with the sonic boom noise; hence, the Thunderbirds and the Navy's Blue Angels will be allowed, on appropriate occasions, to fly faster than the speed of sound in public demonstrations.

THE CORDINER COMMITTEE is shooting for a 31 Oct. deadline. After the series of field visits, including Chairman Cordiner's trip this month to Europe, the Committee will set about the task of preparing its report. If the October deadline is met, it could be possible for the Administration to include a pay raise request in the fiscal '58 budget estimates.

THE ASSN. OF THE U.S. ARMY is completing arrangements for a gala convention in Washington. Its aim: to weld all segments of the Army and civilian supporters into an organization that will be as vocal and effective for Army objectives as are the Navy League and Air Force Association for those two Services. THE ARMY GROUP has a formidable problem this year, however. That is because its meeting comes just before the national elections and some speakers may find it expedient to hold their remarks in check. There will also be close Defense Department scrutiny of speeches by civilian leaders and military people with a view to preventing political difficulties. Nonetheless, the October sessions promise to be exciting, with the Army seen certain to make some important revelations during the meetings.

AIR FORCE AND NAVY FLIERS are envious of the Army's ability to win Defense Department approval for quick release of information about new helicopter speed and distance records. Pentagon security officials are saying O.K. to the Army 'Copter stories, but are keeping a tight rein on aircraft disclosures from the Air Force and Navy.

THUS, IN SPITE OF A LEAK, the Navy was not permitted to confirm the more than 1,000-mile-per-hour record made by its F8U-1 Crusader in a speed run at China Lake. There is talk that the Navy speed record may be made public at the forthcoming National Aircraft Show at Oklahoma City Labor Day weekend. However, if DoD lets the Navy talk about its speed capabilities it will also have to let the Air Force come up with speed data on the F-101, F-102 and F-104—something it is not likely to permit.

AIR OFFICERS FROM COMMUNIST countries will be at the National Aircraft Show next week-end, as they have in previous years. Some to-do was made in the daily press that no official invitation was sent from the U.S. to the Soviet Air Marshal to attend this Oklahoma City show. Fact is, this show is PRIVATELY OPERATED, even though virtually all of its activity is supplied by the U. S. military services. But industry-sponsors and the show-conductors have invited the following: Lt. Col. Frantisek Tisler, Czechoslovakia; Capt. Lajos Czank, Hungary; Maj. Niculae Cucu, Rumania; and Lt. Col.-Engr Boris Fedorovich Bogatyrev, USSR. So Russia will get the word.

NEWEST GIMMICK FOR SERVICE WIVES comes from Hq. Allied Forces Southern Europe at Naples. Because they believe that in an emergency all their staff in the public information division would have to take the field to carry out the press censorship portion of their duties, they have come up with the idea of filling their places at home base with wives. For this purpose they have devised the interesting abbreviation of "SWEET"—Special Women's Emergency Exercise Team. Already participating in SWEET are: Mrs. Hope Hyde, wife of Col. Emery E. Hyde, USA; Mrs. Imogene Young, wife of Brig. Gen. Millard C. Young, USAF; Mrs. Dorothy Fischer, wife of Brig. Gen. Harvey S. Fischer, USA; Mrs. Doris Gregg, wife of Capt. O. C. Gregg, USN; and Mrs. Allene Walter, wife of Capt. John Walter, USAF.

Ft. Monmouth Greet Col. Hartman, First CO

Col. Carl F. Hartman, USA-Ret, first commander of Ft. Monmouth, N. J., was honored with a full garrison review this last week.

Upon his arrival he met the present commander, Maj. Gen. Victor A. Conrad, USA. Following a luncheon in his honor at the Officers Mess, Col. Hartman was conducted on a tour of the post.

He visited the Signal Corps Engineering Laboratories where Brig. Gen. Earle F. Cook briefed him on current Signal Corps developments.

A nostalgic interlude was arranged at the Signal Corps Museum where the party viewed signal equipment out of the past—much of it familiar to the Colonel because of his association with it during the Spanish American War and World War I.

He was presented with a photo album containing photographs taken at Fort Monmouth during his previous tour as Post Commander in 1917 and photos made during his current visit.

Jensen honored them with a dinner party at their home, and Capt. and Mrs. Bruce Leamer of Los Angeles were their recent hosts.

A series of "rush" parties, including a dessert-dance, a cook-out party at a lake-side ranch home and a reception have kept members of the Tau Omicron Phi sorority busy in recent weeks. At their last meeting, they revealed the names of the twelve "rushes" who have been invited to become "pledges." The Service juniors included Misses Joan Bowser, Sheila Christie, Edith Kurtz, Elena Lawler, Margaret Alice Lester, Laure Lou Liberty, Lillian Lucas, Sheree Sigrid Olson, Gail and Marilyn Ottinger, Beverly Piper and Dorothy Tate.

Miss Sherry Handly, daughter of RAdm. and Mrs. Albert E. Handly, was hostess recently at a luncheon at the Coronado Yacht Club, later taking her guests on a cruise aboard her parents' yacht.

USMC Board Selects 49 Full Colonels; Passes Over 37.2 Per Cent Within Zone

A Marine Corps selection board has picked 49 Regular lieutenant colonels for increased rank — four fewer than were named by the fiscal year 1956 board.

In making its selections, the board, headed by Maj. Gen. Verne J. McCaul, USMC, Commanding General, Aircraft, FMF Atlantic, chose 44 officers from a 70-man zone—a 62.8 selection percentage.

Of the total number named to don eagles, three were named from above the zone and two from below the zone which extended from Lt. Col. Robert D. Heini, USMC, Signal No. 88, through Lt. Col. David C. Wolfe, USMC, Signal No. 157, in the 1 Jan. 1956 official Navy Register.

A further analysis of the Register shows that the in-zone selection ratio is 3.2 per cent less than the 66 per cent named by the fiscal year 1956 board. Last year's board named 49 of 74 officers for the rank of full colonel.

The fiscal year 1955 board made all 22 selections from a zone of 36 officers.

Neither the fiscal year 1955 or the 1956 board chose officers from below the zone. This year's board, however, dropped 11 and 29 names to pick up two Supply Duty Only officers, passing over three of four SDO's in the zone.

In all, 16 of 22 Naval Aviators in the zone were named for advancement—an NA passover rate of about 23.8 per cent. In addition, the board chose one NA from above the zone.

All of the officers picked have dates of rank as lieutenant colonels from 1947 with the exception of the senior man selected from above the zone—he has a 1944 date of rank—and the two SDO's named from below the zone who have 1948 dates of rank.

A selection board to choose majors for lieutenant colonel's rank will meet on 27 Aug. The selection zone for unrestricted officers extends from Maj. Stanley N. McLeod, USMC, Signal No. 181, through Maj. Edward L. Fossum, USMC, Signal No. 345. The zone for LDO's was reported in the 28 July edition of THE JOURNAL.

The following is a lineal list of the officers selected for full colonel (names of SDO's are preceded by an asterisk):

Army, Navy, and Air Force Officers May Volunteer For Scientific Duty with NACA

A joint effort to supply the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics with technical and scientific personnel and at the same time provide active duty scientific training for selected military officers has been launched by NACA and the Department of Defense.

Approximately 50 officers of the Army, Navy and Air Force, with degrees in engineering or the physical sciences, will be assigned to duty with NACA in the next six months. Others from the three Services will be assigned later.

As a result of the shortage of scientists, NACA requested the Department of Defense to make available qualified military personnel for assignment to perform scientific research. Since the research programs of NACA are of vital interest in the long-range military plans for aircraft, rockets and missiles, the Military Departments have agreed to provide lists of volunteer eligible officers from which NACA may select candidates.

The cooperative measure is similar to a plan originated in 1955 in the Air Force when 74 officers were transferred to NACA duty. The officer-scientists were selected by NACA from a list of Air National Guard graduates of the AROTC program.

Under the new plan the Army's list will include the names of ROTC graduates who will be offered 18 months active duty with NACA after completing six months duty for training with the Army. The Navy will submit a list composed of qualified officers with aeronautical engineering degrees who have two years additional obligated service, or who indicate their desire to extend their tours of active duty to accept the NACA assignment. The Air Force plans to provide a list of officers who volunteer for two years NACA duty.

Officers assigned to NACA duty will, for all purposes, be NACA employees, their pay, allowances and other costs being reimbursed to the parent Military Service by that agency.

BATTALION COAT OF ARMS to be worn next month by members of Ft. Stewart's 559th Antiaircraft Artillery Battalion. The scarlet and yellow shield consists of a yellow triangle on a scarlet field, crossed by three bosons—ancient arrow-like weapons used to shoot down birds. The yellow triangle symbolizes a searchlight and the unit's origin in 1943 as a Coast Artillery Battalion. The three bosons represent campaign battle honors for WWII service in Northern France, Central Europe, and the Rhineland. The scroll bears the motto "Quaesit Atque Destrui," Latin for "Seek and Destroy."

Obituaries

VAdm. Lynde D. McCormick, USN.

Funeral services were held at the U. S. Naval Academy Chapel, Annapolis, Md., on 20 Aug., for VAdm. Lynde D. McCormick, USN, President of the Naval War College, who died of a heart attack, at the Naval Hospital at Newport, R. I., on 16 Aug. He was 61 years old.

The former Supreme Allied Commander, Atlantic, and the Commander-in-Chief of the U. S. Atlantic Fleet, Admiral McCormick was born at Annapolis, the son of Adm. A. M. Duput McCormick. He was graduated from the U. S. Naval Academy in 1915 and served aboard the USS Wyoming in WWI. At the outbreak of WWII, as a member of the staff of the Commander-in-Chief of the Pacific Fleet, Admiral McCormick was at Pearl Harbor when the Japanese attacked. A few months later he was named War Plans Officer for Adm. Chester W. Nimitz, and participated in the battles of the Coral Sea, Midway and Guadalcanal. He later commanded the USS South Dakota in the Atlantic and northern European waters, before taking command of a battleship division and acting group commander during the battle of Okinawa.

After serving in the Occupation of Japan, Admiral McCormick was appointed Deputy Chief of the Atlantic Fleet. As Supreme Allied Commander, Atlantic, under NATO, he supervised the Naval activities of ten allied nations. His death, only the day before the start of the new Naval War College class, came as a shock to his associates, particularly as he had appeared in excellent health.

Admiral McCormick is survived by his widow, Mrs. Lillian McCormick of "Clermont," Berryville, Va.; and two sons, Cdr. Lynde D. McCormick, Jr., USN, and Mr. J. Jett McCormick. His eldest son, Cdr. Montrose G. McCormick, who commanded a submarine in WWII, was killed in a plane crash in Australia in 1945.

Maj. Gen. Edgar T. Conley, USA-Ret.

Funeral services for Maj. Gen. Edgar T. Conley, USA-Ret, former Adjutant General of the Army, who died at his home at Silver Spring, Md., on 20 Aug., were held at St. Mark's Episcopal Church, Fairland, Md., on 22 Aug., with burial in the Church cemetery. He was 82 years old.

A native of Fairland, General Conley was graduated from the U. S. Military Academy in 1897, when he was commissioned a 2d Lieutenant of Infantry. A veteran of the Spanish-American War, he saw service in Cuba and the Philippines. Following WWI, when he served in France, he was appointed a member of the American Commission to Negotiate Peace, and was the American member of the Inter-Allied Commission sitting in Berlin, charged with examining the matter of Russian prisoners of war in Germany. In 1933, General Conley became Assistant to the Adjutant General, a post he held until he was named Adjutant General of the Army. He was retired from active service in 1938.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Clare M. Conley of "Green Ridge," Rt. 2, Silver Spring; two sons, Brig. Gen. E. T. Conley, Jr., USA, and Mr. Reginald G. Conley; and one daughter, Mrs. Thomas M. Watlington, wife of Major General Watlington, USA.

CE Field Group Shifts

The Corps of Engineers' Military Construction field Group, a small unit whose job is to see that the government receives a dollar's worth of military construction for every dollar spent, will be moved from Omaha, Neb., to Washington, D. C., on Sept. 1.

Organizationally, the unit will continue as an element of the Office of the Assistant Chief of Engineers for Military Construction. It will, however, be incorporated in a new Construction Advisory Division. Members of the group will continue to travel throughout the United States and to many overseas areas inspecting and advising on the global military construction operations of the Army Corps of Engineers.

The Field Group does not duplicate normal construction inspection provided by District Engineers for day-to-day supervision of contractor operations, according to Major General Charles G. Holle, Acting Chief of Engineers. It is a small organization of highly qualified experts available for analysis and resolution of unique construction problems and prompt incorporation of the latest and best techniques in Corps of Engineers world-wide construction.

To date, the Field Group has inspected about $6 billion worth of military construction.

Gas Turbine 'Copters

The Vertol Aircraft Corporation has been awarded a $1,800,000 Army contract to modify and equip two standard H-21C Workhorse helicopters with gas turbine engines.

The contract for the design, development and test calls for installation of two General Electric T-58 engines in each of two Army H-21C helicopters. Installations of the twin turbine power plants in place of the single engine now in use will give the helicopter advantages of multi-engine reliability, higher performance and an increase in the helicopter's all-weather flying capabilities.

characteristic of such documents, made no mention of the substantial support and frequent leadership given by the Democratic members in bringing about these accomplishments.

[The Democrats, the week before, in obvious reference to the Administration's current and threatened cut-backs in manpower, demanded: "National Defense outlays based upon our national needs, not permitting false economy to jeopardize our very survival."]

The text of those portions of the Republican platform treating directly of the National Defense Follow:

The military strength of the United States has been a key factor in the preservation of world peace during the past four years. We are determined to maintain that strength so long as our security and the peace of the world require it.

This Administration, within six months after President Eisenhower's inauguration, ended the war in Korea by concluding an honorable armistice. The lesson of that war and our lack of preparedness which brought it about will not be forgotten. Such mistakes must not be repeated.

As we maintain and strengthen the security of this nation, we shall, consistent with this Administration's dedication to peace, strive for the acceptance of realistic proposals for disarmament and the humanitarian control of weapons of mass destruction.

Our country's defense posture is today a visible and powerful deterrent against attack by an enemy, from any quarter, at any time.

We have the strongest striking force in the world—in the air—on the sea—and a magnificent supporting land force in our Army and Marine Corps. Such visible and powerful deterrents must continue to include:

(A)—A jet-powered, long-range, strategic air force, and a tactical air force of the fastest and very latest type aircraft, with a striking capability superior to any other;

(B)—The most effective guided and ballistic missiles;

(C)—A modern Navy with a powerful naval aircraft arm prepared to keep the sea lanes open to meet any assignment;

(D)—An Army whose mobility and unit fire power are without equal;

(E)—Bases, strategically dispersed at home and around the world, essential to all these operations.

We will maintain and improve the effective strength and state of readiness of all these armed forces.

To achieve this objective, we must depend upon attracting to, and retaining in our military services vigorous and well-trained manpower, and upon continuously maintaining in reserve an enthusiastic and well-informed group of men and women. This will require incentives that will make armed service careers attractive and rewarding. A substantial start has been made toward bolstering the rewards and benefits that accompany a military career. We must continue to provide them.

In order that American youth in our armed services shall be provided with the most modern weapons, we have supported, and will continue to support an effective and well-directed program of research and development, staffed by men of the highest caliber and ability in this field. There is no substitute for the best where the lives of our men and the defense of our nation are concerned.

We fully appreciate the importance of scientific knowledge and its application particularly in the military field.

We pledge ourselves to stimulate and encourage the education of our young people in the sciences with a determination to maintain our technological leadership.

In this age of weapons of inconceivable destructiveness, we must not neglect the protection of the civilian population by all known means, while at the same time preparing our armed forces for every eventuality.

We agree and assert that civilian authority and control over our defense structure and program must be maintained at all times. We believe, without qualification, that in our present Commander in Chief, Dwight D. Eisenhower, this nation possesses a leader equipped by training, temperament, and experience in war and in peace, for both that personal example and that direction of our national defense in which the American people will continue to have confidence, and in which the peoples of all the free world will find an increasing sense of security and of an opportunity for peace.

HOW TO GIVE NOISE THE SILENT TREATMENT

SITUATION: A submarine surfaced somewhere in iceberg country, attempting to establish communications with distant base.

PROBLEM: Interference, or "noise," critically garbles message reception. Radio operator cannot hear message above interference.

SOLUTION: Operator switches on Hoffman Incremental Interference Suppressor, an exclusive feature of Hoffman Communications Receivers. Atmospheric noise is silenced—vital message comes through loud and clear.

This significant achievement in the science of communications has undergone extensive field tests under rugged service conditions. Tests demonstrate that in CW, FSK and AM communications, Hoffman-developed noise limiting techniques can give 100% message recovery from a signal containing atmospheric static 80 decibels greater than the carrier. Interference caused by static, corona discharge, lightning and most man-made noise is reduced to a minimum. Result: clear, reliable radio-communications under extremely adverse operating conditions. The imaginative engineering teamwork and skill that pioneered in the reduction of noise in radio communications is ready to tackle your communications problems too—from basic research through final production.

Hoffman Laboratories is engaged in these many other associated fields of electronics:

Airborne Radar and Navigational Equipment...Missile Guidance and Control Systems...Electronic Countermeasures...Advanced Communications Techniques in the VLF, HF, VHF and UHF regions...High Speed Search and Electronically Tuned Receivers.

This creates a constant need for engineers and physicists of highest calibre. Professional stature in mechanical engineering, electrical or electronics engineering or physics is required.
